Checklist for Spring Riding

Now that spring is in full force, it's time to handle some barn business. You need to ensure everything is in working order from your tack to your trailer. It can be helpful to follow a checklist. This will prepare you for any challenges that come along this spring and summer. Get this season started on the right foot!

1. Order fly repellents.
2. Have your vet out for spring vaccines and a Coggins test (if you plan on traveling).
3. Your farrier should be coming out every 4 to 6 weeks in the spring and summer. Discuss a good schedule with them!
4. Ensure your horse has access to salt and other electrolytes. Keep them hydrated!
5. Write a list of all the shows and clinics you want to attend.
6. Have your truck and trailer inspected.
7. Go through your tack and give it all a deep clean.
8. Evaluate your horse's fitness. If they're out of shape, create a slow and steady program for them.
9. Consider having an equine chiropractor out for any needed adjustments.
10. Regularly drag your arena to keep weeds away.

This checklist will help to make your spring go a little more smoothly. Before you know it, summer will be here!

Why Do Horses Roll?

From needing to cool off to feeling under the weather, here are 7 reasons why horses roll in the dirt.

1. To Cool Off - Ever seen a sweaty or wet horse roll around? They do this simply to cool themselves off. “While it is hard to determine exactly how [rolling] helps with cooling off, it is more likely to help with drying off,” says Bob Coleman, PhD, an associate professor and equine extension specialist for the University of Kentucky. “When [horses] dry off, the evaporation of the water next to the skin can help with cooling.”

2. To Help Shed Their Coat - Springtime triggers horses to shed their heavy winter coats. That loose, dead hair can be itchy. Rolling relieves the scratchiness, and the friction from rubbing their back on the ground speeds up the shedding process.

3. To Ward Off Pesky Flies - A good roll in the dirt coats your horse with dust or mud to create a barrier, making it harder for pesky flies to bother them. It can also help get pests off their back, at least temporarily.

4. Because It Feels Good! - Animals are far better at practicing self-care than humans. Rolling is one way horses relax. “Having a good roll and shake afterward can help activate the parasympathetic nervous system, which takes the body from being stuck in ‘[fight-or-]flight’ to a state of ‘rest and digest,’” says Summer Terry, an equine rehab therapy specialist. “It’s a natural way of discharging bound-up energy and grounding the body,” adds Terry. Sometimes, there’s still excess energy, so you see horses jump up, run, buck, and kick to discharge the remaining energy.

5. Because They’re Sick - In some situations, rolling can indicate pain or illness. Watching your horse roll and getting to know their behavior helps you identify when something is wrong. “It is really important to observe your horse’s normal behavior, because every horse is going to have a little bit of a different quirk,” says Carey A. Williams, PhD, the equine extension specialist and director of the endocrinology and animal biosciences graduate program at Rutgers University. “What might be not normal for my horse might be normal for somebody else’s horse,” Williams says. “So it’s really important for them to just observe their normal behavior so that they can more easily pick out what’s not right.” Generally, pain-related rolling is more frantic and urgent, Williams explains. A horse rolling in pain will appear distressed and may thrash too. These symptoms may indicate your horse is suffering from colic. In cases of colic, knowing how to respond is critical to reducing the potential for additional injury or to help reduce the risk of damaging the intestines. If your horse is frantically rolling, get them up and walking and call your veterinarian immediately.

6. To Stretch and Realign Their Spine - For humans, yoga positions such as the Happy Baby Pose help create healthy spine motion and correct pelvis alignment, says Terry. Horses can achieve similar effects through rolling.

7. To Communicate With Other Horses - Some suggest rolling can help a group of horses communicate, as a scent of the horse will be left on the area that the horse rolled,” says Coleman. Leaving scent behind is important for horses to mark their territory, similar to how dogs urinate on and around different areas.
